The Brief

- Overall Objectives: Evaluate likability, comprehension, enjoyment, and perceptions of quality.
- Desired Associations: Assess whether the show concept feels heartwarming, funny, emotional, engaging, relatable, wholesome, fun and kind.
- Individual Elements: Evaluate the tone, age appropriateness, and visual identity of the show.
- Story Elements: Explore the inclusion of life lessons, nature-based themes, unique songs in each episode, likable characters, and promotion of emotional intelligence.
- Characters: Provide feedback on the likability of each character, the appropriateness of their accents, and whether their age feels suitable for the target audience.

Please note: We only tested the first 2 minutes of the script audio of a basic test read, along with the static designs of the characters

PressPlay Methodology

Overview of Results

Wiggle Wood has tested well at this very early stage of development.

It shows a strong foundation in emotional education that parents value. This early research also shows it holds its appeal beyond the 3-5yrs age range, all the way up to 6-7yrs.

Parents responded very well to the nature-based themes, and they also supported the direction the production is going in - emphasising the need for humour and highlighting the need for bright colours in the design.

Survey Responses

Concept shows strong promise

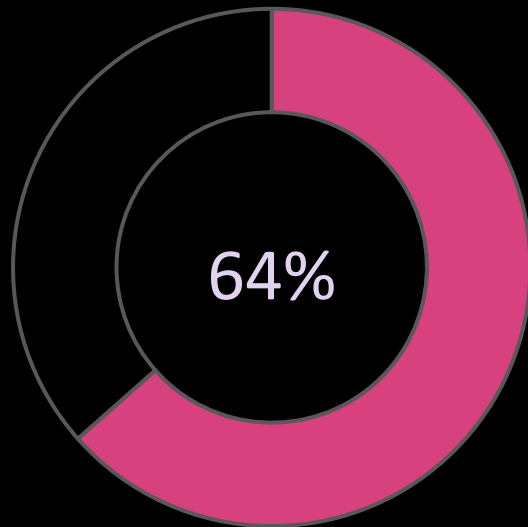

Multi-option survey data

I liked the concept for Wiggle Wood
% agree or agree strongly

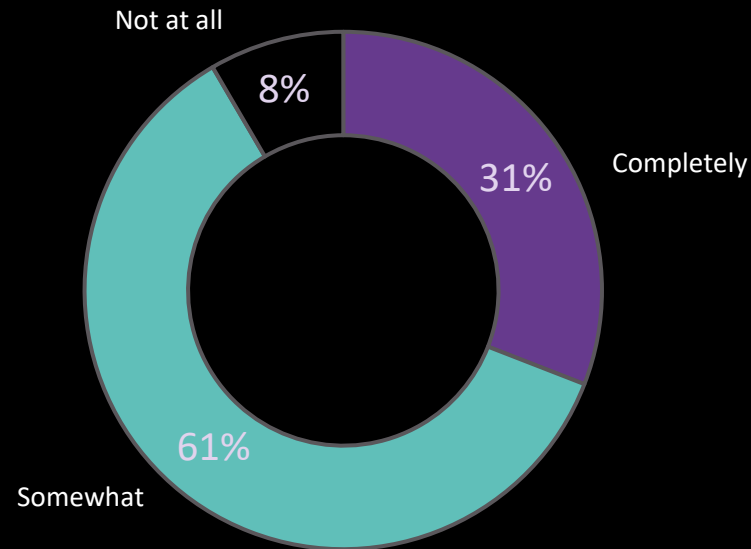

Comprehension: Strong adult comprehension, but child understanding needs clarity

I completely understood the concept for Wiggle Wood
% agree or agree strongly

Thinking specifically about children aged 3-5, do you think they would understand the storyline?
% completely

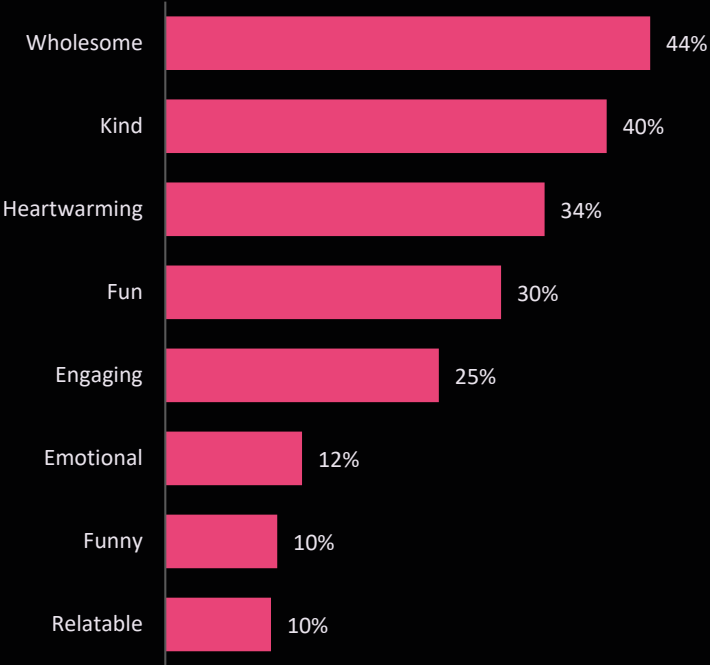

Please note: only the first two minutes were shared with the audience not the whole script.

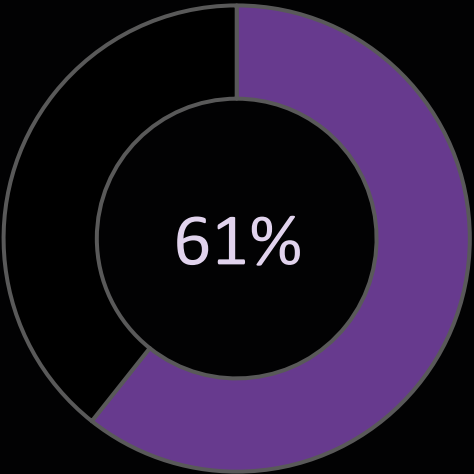

Associations: Parents resonate strongly with emotional learning elements

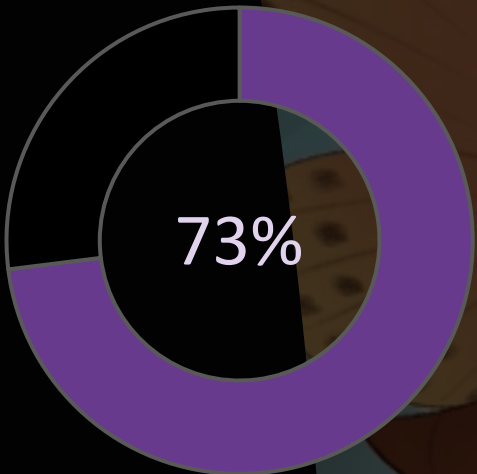

Which of the following words do you strongly associate with Wiggle Wood

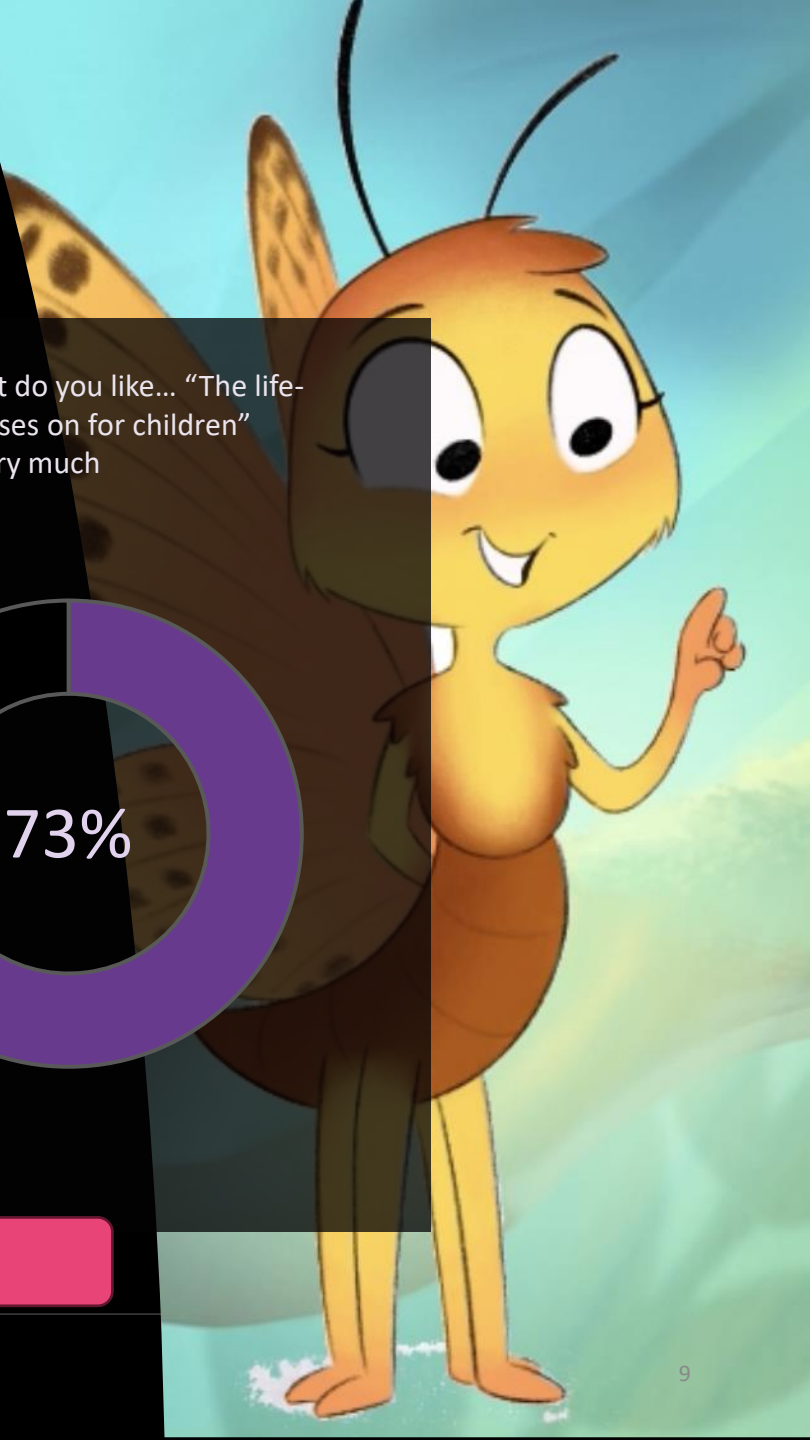

The show helps children understand and talk about feelings and emotions
% Agree or Agree Strongly

To what extent do you like... “The life-lessons it focuses on for children”
% Like/Like very much

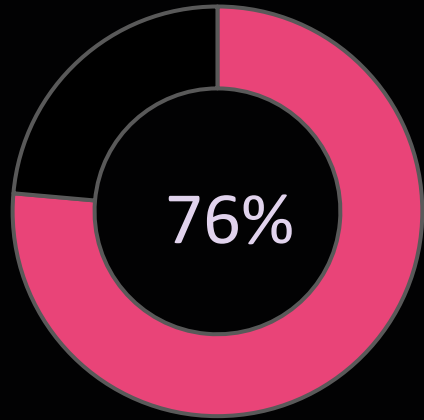

Please note: only the first 2 minutes of the script were tested.

Nature/Natural World, Unique Songs, Visuals: Nature themes excel, results confirm musical direction Wiggle Wood is going in is supported

To what extent did you like ... The themes about the natural world [% like/like very much]

The themes about the natural world were very popular due to appeal to kids and, also the importance of climate change issues

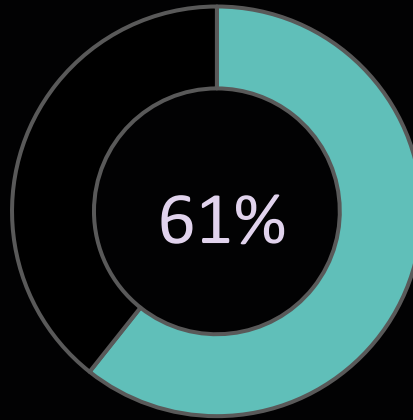

"Children are fascinated by little bugs in the garden so it will be nice to see them in a new way. And to learn valuable lessons along the way."

"If it's about nature—then really lean into that."

"I love the concept of something for that age group that engages them on the subject of the natural world and nature."

"Nature is a key theme right now with climate change, so teaching kids about it early is important."

To what extent did you like ... The visual style [% like/like very much]

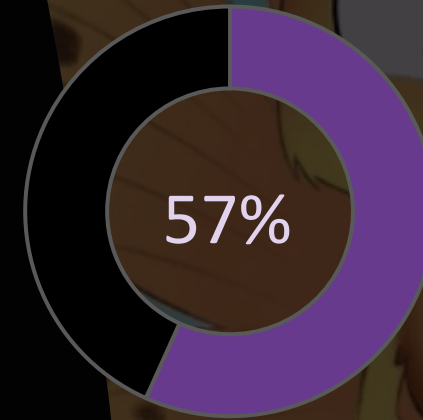

The visual style was appreciated (comparisons to a younger bugs life) however many felt it could be bolder, brighter / more modern (e.g. Bluey, Duggee)

"The visuals could be more colourful."

"Do something different with the look of it. If you look at what shows are popular, it's stuff that has a really distinct visual language, and this didn't have that. "

"Bolder and brighter with a bit more energy and fun"

To what extent did you like ... The unique song in every episode [% like/like very much]

Concept of songs was received positively but memorability of a unique song per episode was questioned

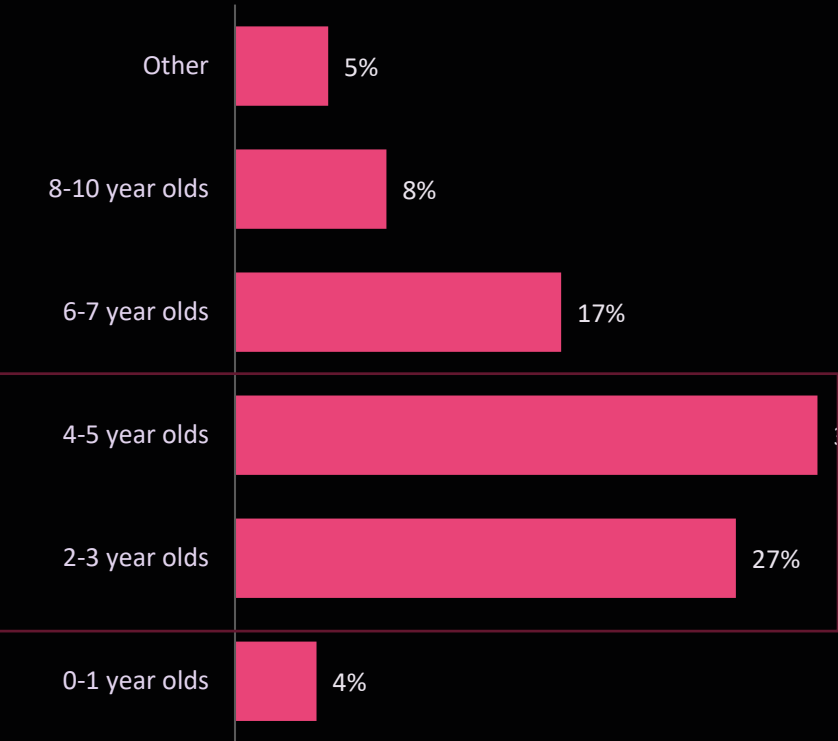

"Nice having a different song each episode but having 1 or 2 that the kids learn and sing along to is better."

"Add more songs with catchy verses, maybe make it into more of a ballad, to have the children singing this for years to come."

Please note: Only the first 2 minutes of the script were tested, only character designs shared, and no music was included.

Age/Gender appeal: Successfully targets core 2-5yrs demographic with broad gender appeal

Age of child of those who stated "I think my child would enjoy Wiggle Wood"

The feedback indicates that "Wiggle Wood" is perceived by parents to be highly appealing to younger children, with the strongest resonance in the 2-5 year old age range. Parents frequently mentioned this group as the primary audience for its visual identity, simple themes, and relatable storytelling.

Many also highlighted its appeal for preschool-aged children, often using the term "pre-school" or specifying ages 3-5.

For parents of slightly older children (6-7 years), the show still holds appeal, particularly due to its engaging characters and life lessons. However, the interest begins to taper off for children above age 7, with only a few mentions for this group, often in the context of co-viewing with younger siblings or specific cases like neurodivergent children (e.g., autistic children enjoying similar shows).

A few parents noted that even toddlers (ages 0-1) might enjoy the show, particularly its bright visuals and music, though this age group was a less frequent mention.

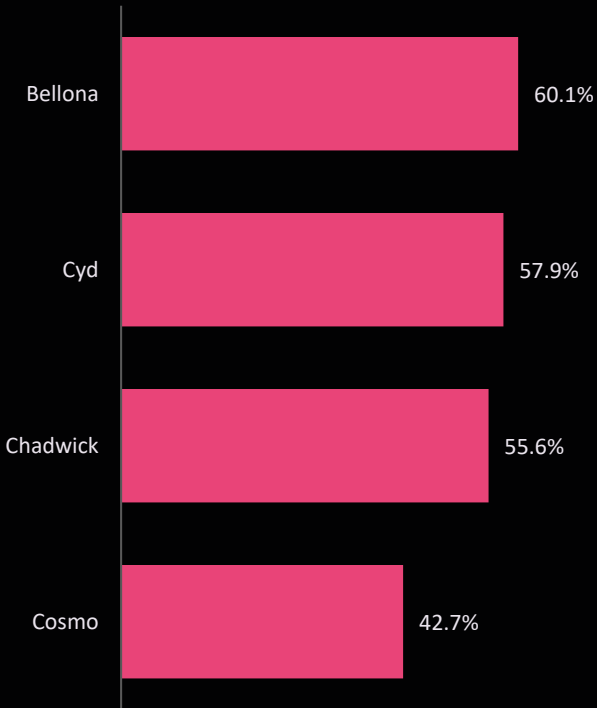

DiO Insight: Maintain current age targeting strategy (with parents) whilst ensuring content complexity serves the full 2-5yrs age spectrum effectively.

Who do you think Wiggle Wood will appeal to?

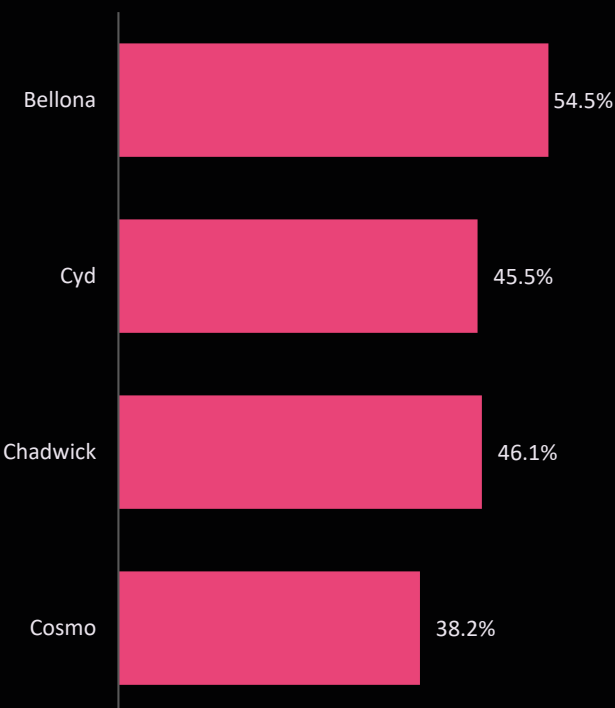

Characters: Bellona and Cyd were the favourite characters. Diversity of accents was welcomed

To what extent did you like the character [____]
% like/like very much (images provided)

To what extent did you like the character’s accent
% like/like very much (images provided)

Please note: The audio was a basic test read performed by one Voiceover Artist covering all 4 voices in a 1hr session.

"The accents make the characters feel relatable and diverse."

"I liked that the characters had different accents—it made it more interesting for the kids."

"The accents are a nice touch and feel authentic, which is great for representation."

"Watch out for the voices becoming grating. Possibly too high pitched."

Voice of the audience: What did you like most?

Emotional Education (23%): Teaching children about emotional regulation, dealing with problems, and mindfulness.

"The concept of teaching children a way to emotionally regulate through movement and talking is badly needed in current times!"

"It's quite cute. The characters are sweet, and it's teaching kids the basics of emotional regulation."

"I did like how it teaches children to deal with their thoughts that they don't know what to do with."

Appealing Visuals and Characters (20%): Bright, colourful, and distinct character designs that resonate with young viewers.

"A nice concept. Getting children to wiggle out their problems. Very cute."

"I liked the animation and the characters; they would get my child's attention."

"The insect characters look adorable and relatable."

"The character designs were unique and visually appealing without being too busy."

"The characters are drawn well, and their subject matter is fantastic."

"The visuals and the characters were fun and sweet."

Catchy Music and Rhymes (18%): The singalong "wiggle" song and rhyming elements were seen as engaging for children.

"The little rhyming tune was catchy, and I think children would enjoy it."

"I liked the song—it made me smile and feel happy. The singalong moment adds a nice bit of energy."

"The wiggle song was good. Helping talk about emotions is good for kids."

"I loved the idea of pulling it all together into a catchy tune for toddlers."

"The rhymes and the jingle of the music provided were entertaining and fun."

Relatability and Learning (15%): Life lessons, simple storytelling, and relatable characters.

"The storyline seemed fun for little ones but also had some good positive messages in there."

"It seems like a cute little show teaching some emotional identification and regulation."

"I liked the idea as it teaches children to share problems with friends and wiggle them out."

"It covered issues we all encounter in one shape or form. It encourages talking about your problems."

Inclusivity and Representation (12%): Diverse characters, including a disabled character, and the use of varied accents.

"I really enjoyed watching it. The different accents gave the characters a lot of charm."

"Nice characters, bit of diversity too. Friendly tones."

"The representation was good. The storyline is accessible to younger children too."

"I loved the inclusivity and approach to dealing with feelings in a healthy manner too."

Voice of the audience: What could be improved?

Character Design and Visual Appeal (29%)

Viewers suggested making the characters more distinct, dynamic, colourful, and visually appealing, with better animation and uniqueness in design.

" Could be a bit more colourful, I understand it is set in nature but there is too much greens, yellows and browns so won't hold attention for young children."
"Making characters less one-dimensional."

Voices and Dialogue (24%)

Voices criticized as grating, high-pitched, or lacking variety.
Dialogue also needed to be more engaging and age-appropriate.

"Maybe make some of the voice tones less high pitched, they could get grating after a couple of episodes."
"The dialogue needs to be more upbeat and exciting to keep children engaged."

Storyline Engagement and Relatability (26%)

Viewers wanted more engaging, relatable, and cohesive storylines, with clear messaging about the show's purpose, relationships, and themes

"Make it funny! Think Bluey."
"Story lines, something that is more age appropriate to things that they experience."
"Don't be afraid of the more emotional stories, they're important to kids and adults too."

Originality and Uniqueness (13%)

Finding unique ways to stand out from other shows.

"Find your niche. If it's about nature - then really lean into that while having the other aspects (emotions etc) as supporting themes."
"Just trying to make it feel more original in tone and maybe a bit less cheesy."

Music and Songs (8%)

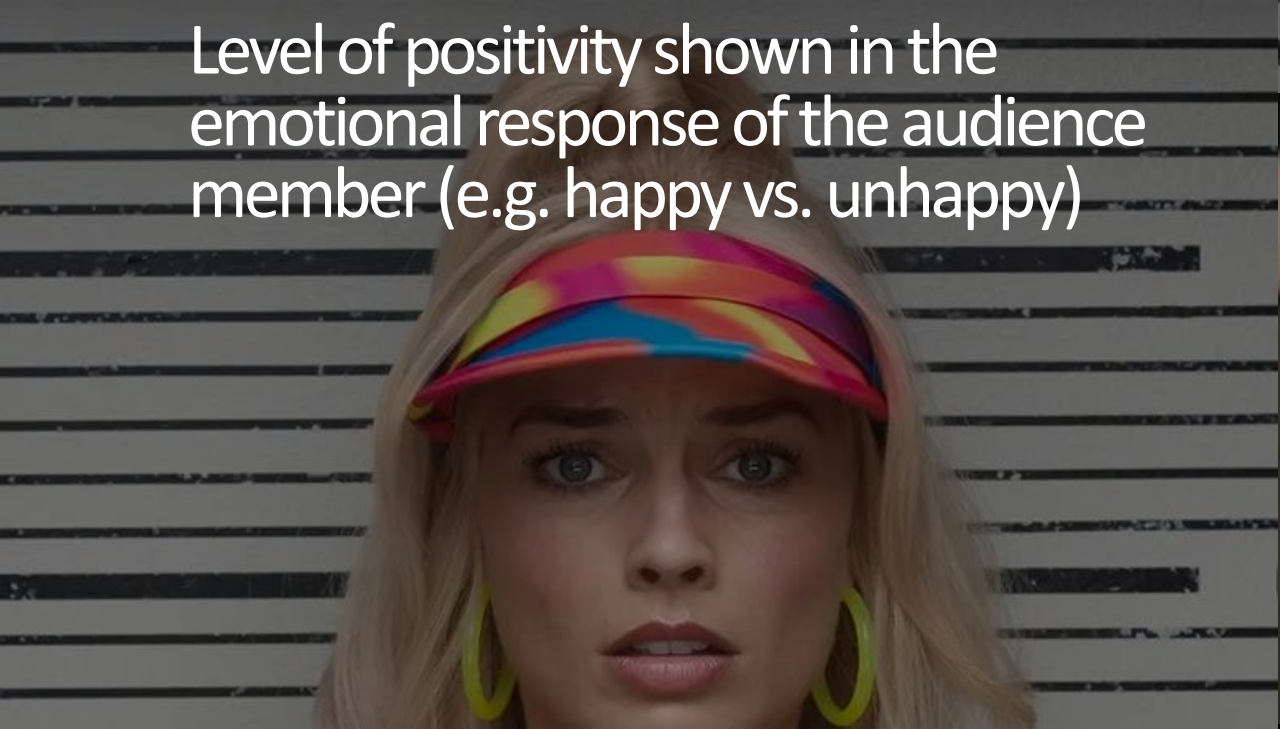

Simpler, repetitive tunes or memorable theme songs to engage children better.

"Acting and voices. I also think children of that age resonate better with repetitive songs rather than a unique one each episode."
"Nice having a different song each episode but having 1 or 2 that the kids learn and sing along to is better."

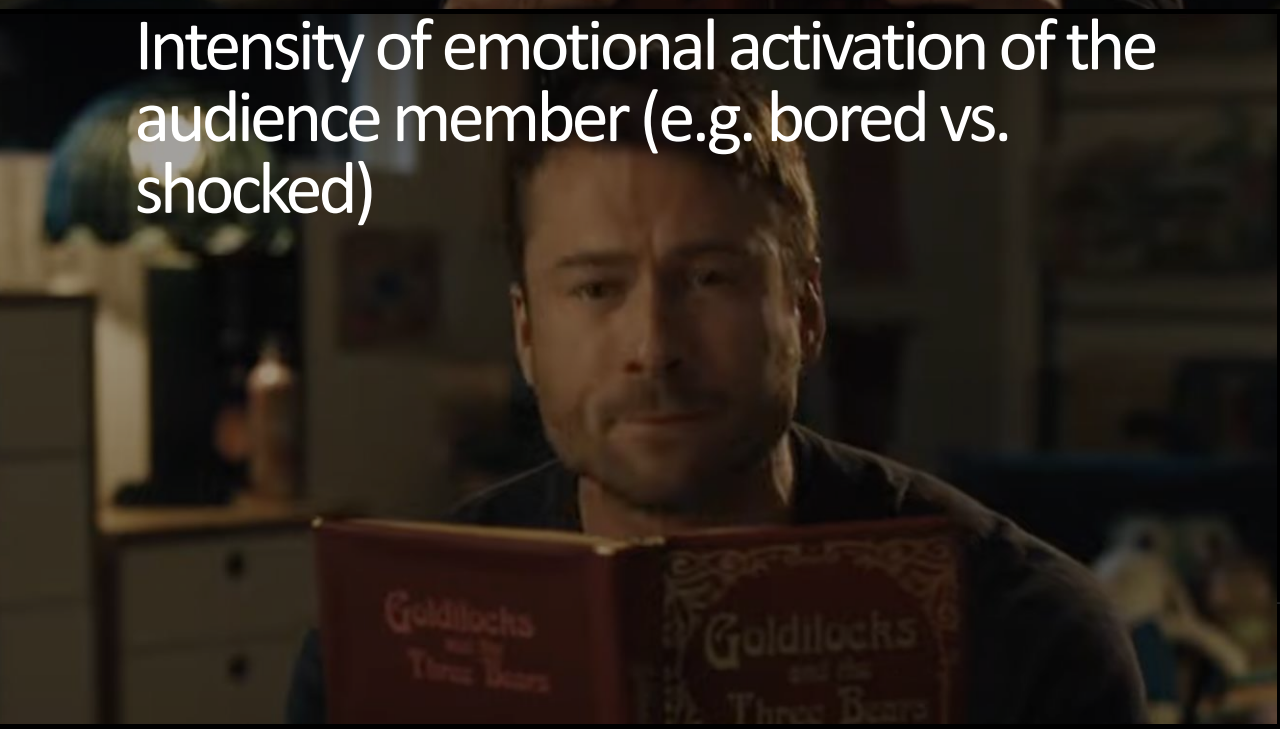

Valence

Level of positivity shown in the emotional response of the audience member (e.g. happy vs. unhappy)

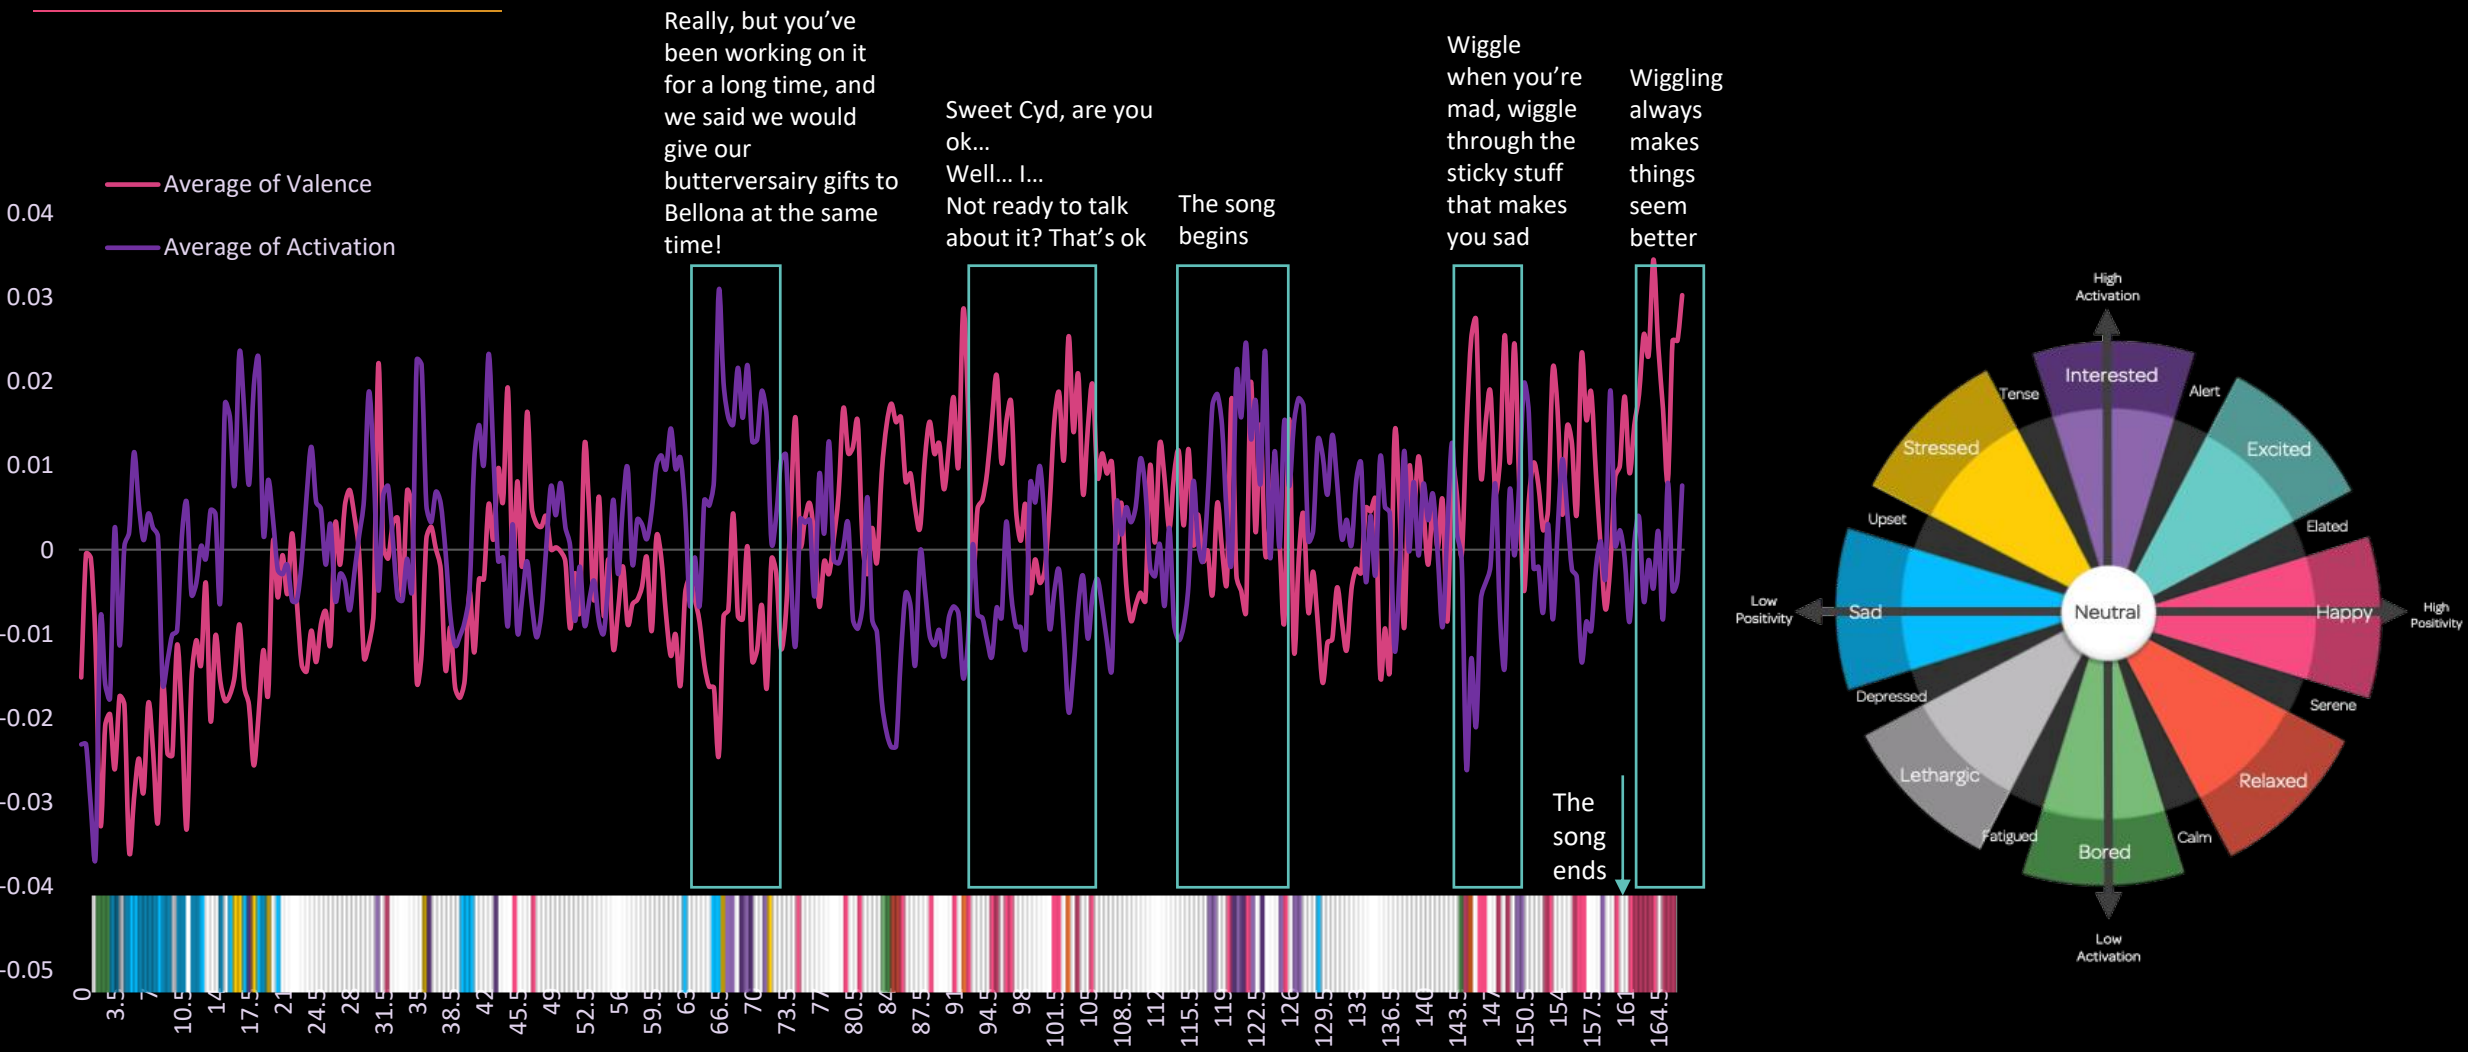

Activation

Intensity of emotional activation of the audience member (e.g. bored vs. shocked)

Emotional Trace: The start and end of the song peak audience interest and happiness, audiences left feeling good

DiO Recommendations

1. Visual Identity:

- potential to implement bolder, more colourful designs

2. Unique Positioning Development:

- opportunity to clearly define what makes Wiggle Wood different from other nature/emotion focussed children's content
- increase signature elements that become associated with the brand – e.g. leaning heavily into the movement/physical element of “wiggling” as a distinctive approach to emotional regulation

3. Character and Voice Refinement

- suggestion to maintaining diverse accents, but adjust pitch and delivery
- consider child voice actors for some characters to increase relatability

4. Music Memorability

- consider 2-3 memorable recurring songs rather than unique songs per episode
- suggest that musical elements are simple enough for target audience to learn and remember

In Summary

This research conducted across 300 UK parents with kids under 6yrs, has delivered highly encouraging validation of Wiggle Wood's creative direction and market potential. Despite sharing only a very limited sample - two minutes of narrated script (recorded in a single session by one voice artist playing all four characters) and basic static artwork – the feedback was overwhelmingly positive across key measures.

Concept Resonance and Appeal:

Parents responded strongly to the concept, with most agreeing it would engage our core audience of 3–5 year olds, and many seeing potential to appeal to children up to six or seven.

Emotional and Thematic Strengths:

The themes around nature, kindness, and emotional wellbeing were particularly well received, confirming there is clear demand for content that helps children understand and express their feelings.

Character and Visual Engagement:

Bellona and Cyd emerged as favourite characters, and the diversity of accents resonated well with parents. The visual style was positively rated overall, with some suggestions to make it even more vibrant.

Music and Memorability:

The idea of unique songs in each episode was warmly received, even in our test's spoken form. Feedback reinforced the value of memorable, repeated songs to support engagement and future soundtrack potential.

Overall, this research demonstrates that Wiggle Wood is firmly on the right track. The market is ready and excited for a series that is wholesome, inclusive, and emotionally resonant. Ultimately, these results demonstrate we should proceed with confidence into the next stages of development and production.
